The open content management system
for professional journalists

“What makes these tools special is that they are designed, from start to finish, with the journalist and the media business in mind. Every decision is tested against the needs of those gathering news, producing it and delivering it, and every function is there only if it makes total business sense.”
David Brewer, Media Helping Media

Newscoop is an open content management system for professional journalists. Designed for online newspapers and magazines, it supports multilingual publications and scheduled publishing of multimedia.

Built-in revenue generation features include support for paid or trial reader subscriptions and geolocation-based services. The administration interface is built with the journalist, editor and publisher in mind, based on feedback from news organizations around the world.

This authorised manual is the perfect introduction for journalists and editors to Newscoop. The user guide introduces all key components of the Newscoop administration interface, the place where you can manage your publication's content, workflow, schedule and contributors.
